

Moving Your Office? Consider the Following...

Self storage units can sometimes seem expensive. I mean, I sometimes think, "why save all of that stuff in the first place?" However, self storage units can actually help you save a lot of money in the long term if you're a business owner, especially if you are relocating or refurbishing an office space. A typical example would be a business owner who is either moving to a different office or launching a new branch. You could sell your office furniture and purchase all new items at the completion of your move, or you could spend a modest amount of money to use self storage while you are moving. Were you aware that the typical office cubicle can cost around one thousand dollars? You can rent a self storage unit for a few months for the cost of one new cubicle. If each employee got a new cubicle, it would amount to tens of thousands of dollars for an average sized office. It would have only cost a few hundred dollars to store your furniture in a self storage unit and recycled it within your new office space at the end of your move. An additional situation where a self storage unit would come in handy would be in the making of bulk purchases. Perhaps it costs one thousand dollars per cubicle if you only purchase one or two cubes, but if you purchase twenty, they are significantly less. If you knew that you would be opening up a new branch of your office soon, you could purchase said furniture in bulk in order to get a wholesale price and store the unused furniture in a self storage unit, thus saving a good bit of money in the long run. There is actually a lot of savings to be had in using self storage units. There are a multitude of ways in which creative business owners can put self storage to use. If used inventively, self storage can save you thousands of dollars over purchasing new goods. They can also help to save a lot of money by allowing you to purchase items in bulk at wholesale prices and storing unused items until they are needed.
