The names chosen are entered in the boxes and submitted. The result is a percentage that is a purported derivation from the names entered. This supposedly is a reflection of romantic plausibility between the two names.

Not at all a bad attempt, one would dismiss in brevity. Closed and narrow though the approach and definition of love is here, there is many a love struck person who has used this. A rather traditional approach to love, one would say to "Dr.Love".

One is not of the genius of Dr. love. A love calculator based on a more sophisticated love formula would be interesting indeed. It would be a substantial improvement. Many such Love calculators have mushroomed through the netscape.
