

Can A Social Security Lawyer Be Rewarding

While many people opt to handle the process of applying for Social Security benefits by themselves, there are many instances wherein hiring a Social Security lawyer can make things a lot easier. Since errors made at the start of the application process results are a common occurrence, many claims for disability benefits are often denied. The good news is that these decisions can often be reversed in favor of the applicant, once he or she hires an experienced Social Security lawyer to assist in the appeal process.

How long will it take before you are covered for Medicare?

Most people who are already receiving Social Security disability benefits will receive Medicare coverage automatically. Information about your Medicare benefits and your Medicare card will be sent to you shortly before you reach the age of 65 or before your 24th month of disability. If you do not currently receive Medicare benefits however, you may not be enrolled in the program automatically. In this situation, you will have to set up an appointment with the office of the Social Security Administration. Upon the processing of your application, the Social Security office will then determine if you are eligible for the Medicare program.

What if I lack one or more credits for disability insurance?

The Social Security Disability Insurance program requires applicants to have a certain number of credits that they have earned during a certain period, as well as a certain amount in earnings ten years before being disabled. A credit is equivalent to a quarter of the calendar year. According to Social Security regulations, you should have earned a specified amount in dollars during a quarter. In order to qualify for Social Security Disability Insurance benefits, you should have accumulated credits for 20 quarters or more...which is equivalent to five years...during the last 40 quarters or ten years before you became disabled.

Working while applying for Social Security

Many people seem to think that they are not allowed to file for Social Security disability benefits while they are currently working. The truth is, you are allowed to file a disability claim and receive benefits while you are presently working. It is important to note however that you must not be making in excess of $900.00 a month, which is the SGA or substantial gainful activity amount. The reason behind this restriction is that the Social Security Administration assumes that if you are able to work and earn more than the SGA, you are not legally considered disabled. Sites Consulted "title="For more information on Orlando social security attorney">Social security help . Social security disability . "title="Social security lawyer, Tampa social security lawyer">Social security attorney florida .

About the Author

Find more information about social security benefits, visit HillAndPonton.com.

Source: <http://greatreads4.com>